“It was a career highlight for me when a well-known NFL owner said he’d rather fly here when he comes to San Diego,” says Jet Air Systems Operation Manager, Wafaa Stelse. As she would with any customer, Stelse is respectful of his privacy preferring not to name drop.

Privacy is a reason this full-service FBO has become a growing alternative –the only alternative – for traffic flying into San Diego International. Jet Air Systems serves Gillespie Field in El Cajon, just east of downtown San Diego. Close to all major area attractions, its tucked away location offers a lower key atmosphere, which the famous and not so famous appreciate.

Adds Stelse, “We’re a nice alternative and we’re extremely responsive. But the location, attitude and customer service has to have something behind it.” For this, Jet Air offers 250,000 square feet of hangar, office and ramp space. Full maintenance for line services, inspections and repairs is provided, all supported by personnel with large FBO expertise. Jet Air’s well-appointed terminal features a luxurious passenger lounge, comfortable crew lounge, executive conference room, WSI Weather Brief/Pilot Center and wireless access. What’s more, the FBO is open 24/7 since Gillespie Field operates outside of San Diego’s 11:00 PM noise curfew space.

While Jet Air sees its share of sports and entertainment celebrities, as Stelse puts it, “Rich and famous or not, we remember your name, your likes and dislikes. We really try to build a one-to-one relationship. A lot of our customers keep returning after 10 years, which is extremely gratifying.”

“Gratifying” is also how Stelse describes Jet Air’s relationship with Chevron – a gratification that goes both ways. “They continually prove they appreciate our business, once even getting us emergency fuel from El Segundo in six hours. The drive itself takes four hours!”

Kay Albitz and everyone at Chevron have become such an important part of our business, we forget what it was like to be connected to any other brand.”
